Supporter turned opponent

- Family friend, former Stelmach supporter Shannon Stubbs to run against premier for his seat in legislature
- Wildrose candidate another tale of disillusioned Tory

When Shannon Stubbs saw the empty chair, she decided she had to take the seat. Stubbs, who had supported the governing Tories since her teens, was sitting in the Vegreville Social Centre in late August with 500 or so others in Premier Ed Stelmach's home riding.

They wanted answers and wanted to voice their anger over a proposed monster power line that could cut through their prime farmland.

All the opposition party leaders were there — David Swann of the Liberals, Brian Mason of the NDP and Danielle Smith of the Wildrose Alliance.

There was one empty chair, left for local legislature member Stelmach, who was actually down the road holding a news conference saying he couldn't attend because there was a potential conflict of interest — he owns land that may have a line run through it.

Stelmach also suggested there were signs the Wildrose had helped organize the event, leaving him with the unpleasant option of being skewered in person or mocked in absentia.

Still, for Stubbs, the empty chair was the turning point.

"I just couldn't believe he wouldn't show up to be accountable," said Stubbs, who has now been nominated as the Wildrose candidate to take him on in the next election, slated for the spring of 2012.

Stubbs, 30, grew up in the Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville riding. The Ed Stelmach she remembers was the cabinet minister who returned to her tiny community of Chipman every Remembrance Day to lay a wreath.

"That's the Ed I knew and supported, the person who would be there," said Stubbs.

Youth help youth prepare for winter

► YESS director pleasantly surprised by U of A students' clothing drive

ANDREAS MORSE
@METRONEWS.CA

Medical and dental students from the University of Alberta put down their books for the afternoon and picked up some gently used winter clothing for the Youth Emergency Shelter Society (YESS).

"We chose YESS as our humanitarian project for our class, and they need funds. But when it starts to get cold, they need clothes too," said Danielle Tingley, a dental student and one of the organizers.

"We want to be good role models for these youth. We're trying to do what we can."

Sue Keating, acting director for YESS, said she only heard about the clothing drive recently.

"It was a huge surprise," she said.

YESS indeed

- The shelter program has 16 beds, filled on a first-come, first-served basis.
- The program is for youth aged 15 to 18.
- More than 500 youth access the shelter every year.

"They've done all the planning and all the organizing, and we just have to stand back and be ready to accept the donation."

Keating said efforts like this tend to start happening this time of year.

"We'll get a call out of the blue from someone who is thinking about our kids," she said.

"There are a million different things that people do (for YESS) around this time of year. I walk around with tears in my eyes because the community is so behind these kids."

Getting a taste of wartime

Leading up to Remembrance Day, visitors to the Rutherford House Provincial Historic Site yesterday experienced a taste of what it could have been like at the home front during the First World War.

KATHY LE

Having a place to call home is the first step to solving the problem of homelessness.

This idea is the premise behind HomeFest, an annual musical and arts event aimed at creating awareness about the issues of housing and homelessness in Edmonton.

tant to find a safe place to live.

"If you're just all over the place and staying here and there, your goals are misguided because you have nowhere to feel comfortable and nowhere to feel safe," she said.

Although much progress for homelessness has been made in the last eight years through HomeFest, Keith Harding, chair of Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness, said the importance of the issue has to be addressed to the different levels of government so something significant can be done.

"We don't need any more studies, what we need is action," he said.

"A large amount of funding comes from donations from people, but ultimately it should come from the government."

Police aren't sure why, but they say someone left a "homemade explosive device" near a cell-phone tower in southern Alberta.

Lethbridge Staff Sgt. Jason Dobirstein said a Telus employee noticed a suspicious package outside a fenced Dobirstein said the bomb was small, and that it likely would only have injured the person handling it if it had exploded.

He said he doesn't believe the cell tower was targeted because the device was found some distance away in some grass. No one was injured and there was no damage to equipment or property.

WW1 veterans honoured at Vimy memorial

► Young Canadians make pilgrimage to France ►
Students serve as guides at Vimy, Beaumont-Hamel

Three Montreal buddies, who had promised themselves for years they would make the pilgrimage, carried bouquets and fought back tears as they joined 800 other people yesterday at Remembrance Week ceremonies at the Canadian National Vimy Memorial.

It was an eclectic group who huddled in the raw cold: serving Canadian soldiers stationed in Europe, local French dignitaries, veterans and their families, and a class of 10-year-old French schoolchildren from nearby Douai who had spent weeks learning to sing O Canada.

Bloc Quebecois Leader Gilles Duceppe, on a 10-day working tour of Europe, joined the procession of officials laying wreaths at the site of the 1917 Battle of Vimy Ridge.

But the most striking note was the presence of dozens of younger Canadians, some who had travelled great distances to be at the memorial.

They came despite the passage of time that's eroding memories. A new poll from The Historical-Dominion Institute suggests Canadians know the most about the current war in Afghanistan rather than earlier conflicts.

Montrealers Robert Stinziani, James Gallagher and Anthony Ferro, all 35 and friends since childhood, brought flowers to

On Saturday, 200 people gathered for services at Beaumont-Hamel, near Vimy Ridge, considered hallowed ground to Newfoundlanders.

Miner finishes marathon

A Chilean miner ran, walked and hobbled his way to the finish line of the New York City Marathon, showing the determination that helped him survive more than two months trapped underground.

Edison Pena needed bags of ice for his knees as he made his way over the 42.195-kilometre course yesterday. He crossed the finish line in Central Park around 3:30 p.m. after starting in Staten Island at 9:40 a.m.

The 34-year-old was among the 33 miners rescued last month after spending 69 days entombed 700 metres underground by a cave-in.

An avid runner, he jogged several kilometres every day through tunnels. He had cut his steel-tipped electrician's boots down to ankle height so he could train along the 1,000-metre corridor where the men were trapped.

Mrs. Obama charms India

President Barack Obama tried to avoid it, but he couldn't escape being pulled into a dance by schoolchildren celebrating the Indian holiday of Diwali, or the festival of lights, yesterday.

Obama watched admiringly as his wife, Michelle, joined girls dressed in colourful hues in a swaying dance with graceful hand gestures.

He appeared to resist when students from Holy Name High School in Mumbai approached. Eventually, Obama gave in, got up and strutted his stuff, too. He jumped around a little and made awkward sawing movements with his arms.

The performance was reminiscent of George W. Bush playing drums during a trip to Africa.

Mrs. Obama joined the children far more enthusiastically than her husband.

Perhaps it was because she'd already won over the Indian media by kicking off her flats a day earlier and dancing with underprivileged children elsewhere in Mumbai.

Message crosses continents

► Letter in bottle for fisherman's daughter travels the Atlantic Ocean

More than two years have passed since he wrote his note, but Randy Rumbolt never imagined his message in a bottle would travel from the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and Labrador to the shores of Scotland.

The fisherman was thinking of his teenage daughter, Cally, when he wrote her Pickering, Ont., address on a piece of paper, sealed it in a Ziploc bag and rolled it into a plastic bottle.

Someone did get his message, but the words in the weathered note were barely decipherable by the time Sofi-Ona Hamer picked it up off the west coast of the Isle of Harris. "I couldn't believe it," she said. "I've never in my life found a message in a bottle before. It was quite exciting."

The Scottish woman is just the latest person to pick up one of Rumbolt's notes across the pond. He threw dozens of bottled notes over the edge of the shipping vessel he worked on between 2007 and 2008.

Mass grave for victims of volcano

Bodies of dozens killed by Indonesia's most volatile volcano — some too charred to be identified — were placed into a mass grave yesterday, as people scared that another eruption was coming fled the city at the foot of Mount Merapi.

As relatives wept and men recited traditional Islamic prayers, villagers and policemen unloaded the corpses — some in plain wooden coffins, others still in the morgue's yellow body bags — from ambulances.

They were placed into a massive trench, dug into a large green field in the shadow of the volcano, which has claimed 138 lives in the past two weeks.

Eddie Bauer sale upsets vets

A major international retailer's effort to advertise its fall clearance event as a "Remembrance Day" promotion is proving to be a tough sell for Canadians.

Eddie Bauer's week-long "Remembrance Day" sale, launched in stores across Canada on Friday, sparked protests from veterans who felt disrespected by the American clothing giant.

Civilians also cried foul on social media sites, lambasting the retailer for what they described as an "insensitive" approach.

Eddie Bauer announced the sale early Friday morning, in an email flyer promising up to 75 per cent off fall merchandise.

Eddie Bauer president Neil Fisk issued a statement saying the Canadian

"(It) should be a day of admiration, respect and honour for veterans, not to be drawing people to a sale."

sale was based on a similar promotion held at its U.S. locations.

"We appreciate the sensitivity around this holiday and the feedback we have received. We have tremendous respect for veterans across Canada and the U.S. and will adjust our marketing and communications accordingly," Fisk said.

Canadian housing market no longer 'gangbusters'

Canadian home sales will fall nearly 14 per cent by the end of next year from the overheated levels reached in 2009, the Canadian Real Estate Association predicted Friday as it lowered its housing market forecast.

Lacklustre economic and job growth, weak consumer confidence and recent interest rate hikes expected to resume next year led the real estate group to predict national sales will slide 4.9 per cent this year.

The decline will nearly double to nine per cent for 2011 because the period of unusually high sales began in the last half of 2009 but held over until the first quarter of this year — making next year's expected fall bigger by comparison.

Interest rates

The Bank of Canada responded to a slumping economy by setting interest rates at a record low 0.25 per cent last year in part to stimulate demand in the housing market.

▶ The Bank has now raised the interest rate to one per cent and is expected to leave it there into next year.

With sales down only four-tenths of a percentage point in the first nine months of the year, the vast majority of the 2010 slide will be felt over the next few months.

That could continue to squeeze housing prices, making it a buyer's instead of a seller's market in many parts of Canada.

"The market has stabilized but it was just going gangbusters a year ago," said Gregory Klump, chief economist of the real estate broker's group.

"The declines that are expected over the rest of the year don't refer to a decline in the market now, but to what happened a year ago, that it was on fire a year ago and its not expected to meet the breakneck pace that was being recorded in the fourth quarter of last year," he said.

The revised forecast in sales was much lower than the estimates the group made in July for a 1.2 per cent annual slowdown this year and 7.3 per cent in 2011.

NOT JUST ANOTHER PEDESTRIAN PLAN

Urban Compass

TERENCE HARDING

The other day I took a walk along Jasper Avenue from 100th Street to 106th Street with the intent of determining what could be done to make it something we could all be proud of.

The first thing I would do is get rid of those ugly things in the centre of the street. What they were intended to be is anybody's guess. Ugly is too kind a word for them. Then I would get rid of the on-street parking and narrow that six-block section of Jasper to two lanes. Doing so would create a hue and cry that it would make it harder to find a place to park and make it more difficult for traffic to move through that part of the city. My response would be that that was exactly the intent.

If you make it easy for people to bring cars into the downtown, they will do exactly that. If we want people to use transit, we are going to have to do more than ask them to do so. Every kilometre of expanded LRT should go hand-in-hand with reducing the number of parking spaces in the downtown. The next thing I would do is expand the width of the sidewalks to take up the space left from reducing the traffic lanes. Over the last few years, new restaurants have opened on Jasper Avenue and we should be encouraging more to do so. If we expanded the sidewalk space, the current restaurants would be able to create patio space in the summer. Wouldn't it be nice to see people out enjoying lunch on a sunny summer day?

"If we want people to use transit, we are going to have to do more than ask them to do so. Every kilometre of expanded LRT should go hand-in-hand with reducing the number of parking spaces in the downtown."

In the initial stages, those restaurants shouldn't have to pay anything for the extra space they are provided.

The other thing I would do would be to light the hell out of the street.

I'm not talking about sodium vapour lights, but something warm and interesting. Perhaps we could create lighting that reflects the early days of Edmonton or we could give it some character with some interesting neon lighting. Neon lights are one of the things all interesting cities seem to have in common.

Well-designed street furniture would also add some sorely needed panache.

In the end, it would be nice if we could turn those six blocks into a pedestrian area. But I can only dream.

We asked: Should we drop daylight time?

TORONTO. Yes. I don't believe we save a darn thing. How can it? Sure, it's lighter in the mornings, but it's still dark enough that you have to use the lights to get ready for work and it's darker earlier in the evenings. ANN FAGAN

Scene in brief

A fan of NBC's Law & Order: Criminal Intent has been convicted in New York on one of two counts charging him with stalking star Kathryn Erbe.

Jurors deliberated less than a day before reaching the split verdict Friday against Charles Nagel in federal court in Brooklyn.

Prosecutors say the 36-year-old man began stalking Erbe in 2008 by trying to hug her while she was filming on location in Manhattan.

Authorities say once he was rebuffed, he began composing creepy missives about her on a social network.

The 44-year-old Erbe testified that she was scared because she thought Nagel was obsessed with her.

Nagel took the stand to say it was all a misunderstanding.

Advocacy: Pamela Anderson is in Israel to promote fur ban and meet with ultra-Orthodox leaders ► Conan O'Brien returns to late-night TV with his new show, Conan.

Can Conan O'Brien conquer TV, again?

► After his Tonight show departure, O'Brien went viral. Now, he returns to late night.

Timing is key in comedy, especially for one formerly unemployed talk-show host. While Conan O'Brien's departure from Tonight was a sorry mess, it was in sync with the growing influence of social media.

His extensive use of Twitter and Facebook gave O'Brien a direct pipeline to fans, keeping him in a computer-generated spotlight.

With tonight's debut of his TBS show, Conan, O'Brien will learn if being an online sensation can help to foster ratings success in cable TV.

There's no question the online universe drastically affected O'Brien's post-Tonight life. With an NBC settlement agreement that included an extended ban on TV appearances, O'Brien found he could keep followers intrigued with messages on Twitter and Facebook. Then there's the Team Coco website, giving the public show details that include the guest list.

"I was supposed to be in the wilderness, but I carried on this relationship that in some ways seemed more meaningful than any relationship I've had in television," he said.

The question now is will online fans tune in for Conan or wait to see it online? TBS is making it easy, announcing the show will be posted online the morning after it airs.

But that means ratings take a hit. O'Brien averaged 2.5-million viewers during his Tonight tenure, a number that would be welcomed by TBS. The bar for success isn't overwhelmingly high, said analyst Steve Sternberg. If O'Brien can increase the under one-million nightly viewers George Lopez was getting for TBS at 11 p.m., then Conan will "probably be considered successful," Sternberg said.

What about the possibility of booking wars?

"I've made a lot of friends over the years. I've always been pretty much able to have most of the people I wanted on the show ... I don't think that's going to change," O'Brien said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Creator of $#! My Dad tells critics to tweet off

Canadian comic Will Sasso is shrugging off critics of his Twitter-inspired hit sitcom, $#! My Dad Says, saying the show's consistent ratings triumphs are speaking louder than any bad review.

The series has generated some of the most terrible TV reviews of the new season, but Sasso says he'd much rather take cues from the audience that is making the series a modest hit on CTV and CBS.

"Comedy is subjective. There's a lot of people watching the show and it's won its time slot every week that it's been on, so that's a review in my mind," says Sasso, who portrays the son of a crusty war veteran, played by William Shatner.

on air. And it did so even though none of the 26 critics listed on metacritic offered a positive notice.

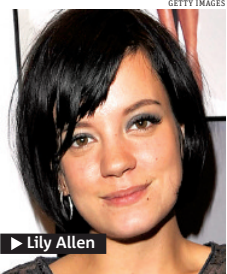

TV expert Marc Berman says the average viewer just wants to be entertained by a conventional premise: A son moves in with his cantankerous father, a second son visits often with a wacky wife.

"It's not brain surgery. There's nothing wrong with that," says Berman, a Mediaweek columnist.

Sasso says his new show is unique in that it's inspired by real people, whose lives have already been well-documented through show creator Justin Halpern's Twitter page and spinoff book.

Still, Berman credits much of the success of $#! My Dad Says to the juggernaut crowd-pleaser The Big Bang Theory, which immediately precedes the show on Thursday nights.

Robert set to pop the question?

Robert Pattinson is reportedly hard at work designing a wedding ring for Kristen Stewart, according to the National Enquirer.

But the press-shy pair aren't hurrying to the altar — yet.

"Rob wants to design the ring himself," a source says of the ring, which is to be used for their characters' wedding scene in the next Twilight film. "He feels their on-screen nuptials will be a very special and personal moment, even though it's supposedly make believe."

But the source claims Pattinson is planning on having the ring pull double duty: "The plan is that when the cameras stop rolling after their on-screen nuptials, romantic Rob will drop to one knee and slip his designer ring on his real-life love as he proposes marriage," the source says.

Facing 72 per cent rate of unwed mothers, U.S. blacks explore reasons and answers

Families have embraced Lucha Libre Mexican wrestling nights, part of Lucha Libre Internacional Gladiadores Unidos, at family friendly venues in Phoenix.

Tough lucha love

► Family night at the wrestling ring ► For some bonding, nothing beats the cursing of lucha libre ► Americans in the Southwest embracing lucha libre as one of their cultural tradition

Adorable Yuki, a hefty figure in pink and black spandex, soaks in the cheers and ear-splitting screams from the crowd. Tonight, the wrestler has a trick — or rather a treat — up his sleeve.

To celebrate the Mexican holiday, El Día del Niño (Kids' Day), Yuki hurls handfuls of candy into the audience. Kids make a dive for it, then are back in their seats — joining their parents in booing and yelling at the referee to shut up.

Bodies, not candy, are what tend to go flying at a lucha libre wrestling match. But in heavily Hispanic cities such as Phoenix, some parents are choosing the decades-old Mexican form of free fighting as a way to gain some quality time.

Little kids can swear and flash the middle finger during what are sometimes violent matches. Mothers typically have one eye on a fight and the other on a stroller.

"When you're at a movie, it's quiet and relaxed. Here you can yell, scream and get all the anger out of you. You can have fun and all that," said Ernesto del Real, who has taken his wife and three of his children, ages five to 11, to body-slammings bouts on Friday nights.

The profanity and pummeling might appal non-

Hispanic families. But anyone familiar with lucha libre would know it's part of the spectacle.

"When you're at lucha libre, you shout obscenities, insult people, act in ways that wouldn't necessarily be acceptable elsewhere," said Heather Levi, an assistant professor in anthropology at Temple University. "I remember the time I was sitting in front of woman who was teaching a three-year-old to do it. It was like, 'OK, now you say...'"

Lucha libre has been rooted in Mexican popular culture since the 1930s. Wrestlers wear colourful masks and personas.

The genre gained more notice when it was showcased on TV and in B movies.

"Children were not allowed into arenas (in Mexico City) until the mid-1980s," said Levi, author of The World of Lucha Libre: Secrets, Revelations, and Mexican National Identity.

Now, she said, "In Mexico, people bring their children, their grandparents."

In the Southwest, it seems that people are seeing lucha libre as a cultural thing, "really embracing it as something Mexican they take their kids to," said Levi.

For some kids who have grown up in the U.S., watching Jack Black in Nacho Libre, has been the extent of their lucha libre exposure. Seeing authentic luchadores go at it has been a bonding experience.

Peanuts in pregnancy linked to allergy-prone kids

Peanut consumption while pregnant is associated with a higher likelihood that a woman's allergy-prone baby will test positive for peanut allergy, a new study suggests.

A warming recipe for chilly days

- Veal and white beans make this soup nutritious
- Add a roll and some fruit for a whole meal

Leeks, leafy greens, tomatoes, white beans and ground veal pack a nutrient punch in this simple soup. It can be made in advance and reheated before serving.

Add a whole-grain roll and a piece of fruit for a quick, healthy, energy-sustaining meal.

Preparation:

1 In a large saucepan, cook ground veal with salt and pepper over medium-high heat, breaking into small pieces, until no pink remains, about 10 minutes.

2 Add leeks and cook until tender but not browned, about 5 minutes. Stir in rosemary and bay leaves.

3 Pour in chicken broth and bring to a boil.

4 Add in chard and reduce heat to maintain a simmer; cook for 10 minutes.

5 Stir in tomatoes and beans and heat through, about 5 minutes. Let sit for 10 minutes before serving.

6 Serve garnished with shaved Parmesan cheese and lemon zest.

► Do-it-yourself fashion is growing as people are finding new ways to save money, look great and have unique outfits.

Get creatively green by recycling your clothes

► Taking old clothes and re-purpose them with a few cuts and fixes ► Allows you to add some individuality to your wardrobe ► Get inspired, save some money and look great

LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

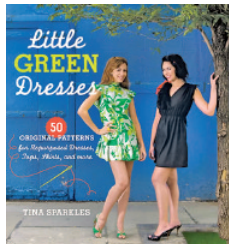

People have been recycling clothing for as long as we can remember. From hand-me-downs to taking up hemlines to sewing a button back on, the do-it-yourself fashion once reserved for small fixes is finding its way to stores, websites and catwalks. And you can be a part of it simply by using what's already in your closet.

Whether you call it recycling, re-fashioning, re-purposing, reclaiming or something else, it's an act of showing off your individuality. It is also a good way to take a stand against consumer culture.

Tara White, founder and designer of Embody Clothing, which is sold across Toronto and Ottawa, says that she began making clothing because she didn't like the kinds of fashion sold in malls.

"I found it really uninspired, and it seemed like everyone was wearing the same uniform," she says. "I liked the idea of when I'd make something, it would be one-of-a-kind. I started making clothes for myself, started making more and then was selling."

Tina Sparkles, a designer in Austin, Texas, recently released a book named Little Green Dresses, with 50 patterns for all different kinds of outfits.

"I feel really passionate about how our consumer culture is messing things up in the world and I think that gaining an awareness of that is important and I want to help spread that word," she says.

Sparkles feels that the idea of being eco-friendly can be too expensive and limiting, but people are still interested in being green. If you don't want to use your own clothes, you can go to a thrift store, garage sale or even set up a clothes swap with your friends.

"It takes your own time and creativity," she says. "My inspiration comes from a lot of places. I love looking at vintage clothing and the old shapes and tiny details, trying to figure out a way to incorporate them into something new."

If you're interested, start off small. Find a cheap old piece of clothing at Value Village that you have no qualms with ripping apart. You may get something out of it you'll love.

Preloved

► eBay. One of Toronto and Montreal's most popular brands of refashioned clothing, Preloved, unveiled a partnership with eBay last week. The collection includes eight designs, such as cardigans, sweaters and a tote bag. "I thought that it was a fantastic opportunity for us to join forces with them," says founder and CEO of Preloved, Julia Grieve. "It's perfect timing. People understand it, are very comfortable with it and now they're ready to purchase it if it's online."

CANADIANS HAVE HELP AVOIDING BPA

DAVIDSUZUKI.ORG/BLOGS/
QUEEN-OF-GREEN

As a mother who cannot breast-feed, I'm wondering what are the effects of bisphenol-A (BPA) in canned baby formula?
Heidi from Edmonton

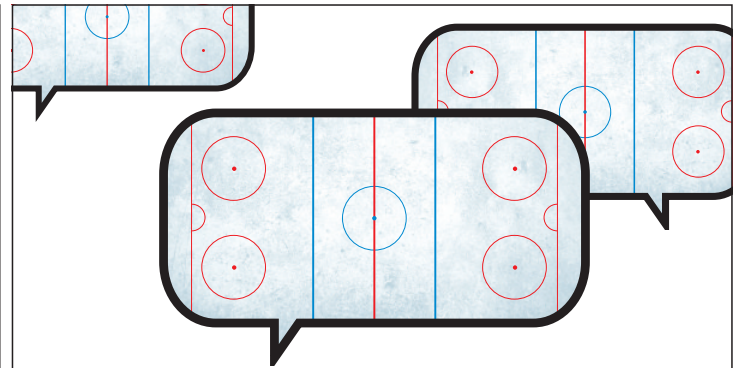

Bisphenol-A or BPA is a human health concern because of its ability to mimic estrogen. It's an industrial chemical used primarily in polycarbonate plastic. You might remember in 2008 when our federal government banned BPA from plastic baby bottles. But BPA is also in the epoxy resins lining our canned goods, and it becomes hazardous to our health because it refuses to stay put and migrates into food like baby formula. So, in addition to replacing your plastic baby bottles with BPA-free plastic or glass, choose powdered baby formula. Canadian tests show no BPA leaching into powdered formula, which is good news for moms. Or, look for liquid formula sold in glass or BPA-free plastic. There is good news for all Canadians when it comes to concerns about this hormone-disrupting chemical. This fall, Canada secured a world first — a formal designation of BPA as "toxic." This means our government now has a stronger authority to ban BPA in consumer products. In the meantime, we should all buy fewer canned foods. According to Statistics Canada, more than 90 per cent of Canadians have detectable levels of BPA in their bodies. Choosing alternative packaging like glass jars or buying fresh, frozen or dried fruits and veggies will reduce your exposure. Dried beans, for example, have great flavour and texture, and you can control the salt and sugar content.

For the Love of Edmonton: Marrying Good Design with Good Ratings

Who doesn't drive through Old Glenora and admire the history and the splendor of the architecture present in the older communities in Edmonton. And yet, many of our cities newest developments are fashioned around communities halfway across the world.

Larch Park aims to be different. A marriage between old and new, this new development South of the Whitemud Ravine brings together modern architecture and craftsman home building. Two styles that dominate the richly cultured neighborhoods of our city.

John Harrop knows architecture (Architectural Guide Lines & Approvals). "There tend to be a variety of colors, home styles and home sizes in the old areas, rather than many modern communities which tend to be a lot more monotonous," said Harrop. "The first thing we wanted was some variety overall."

The combination of Modern design with Craftsman design may seem far-fetched but in reality they actually complement one another. The designs are generally asymmetrical and the rooflines from one house flow visually into the next, regardless of its contemporary or historical design.

"Looking at the actual architecture we looked at what has its historical roots in Edmonton or Alberta. Suburbs often look afar, but we thought really that has nothing to do with Edmonton," said Harrop. The Modern was certain common and so was the Craftsman so it sort of came from that."

The second aspect of the home construction for Larch Park is the environmental perspective. Using a computer that produces hypothetical ratings based on designs, builders can predict the efficiency of their houses. All homes built in the Larch park community must sustain a minimum %80 Energuide rating.

"A typical house built in 2010 would probably be a low to mid seventies. One built in the 1950's is in the sixties," said Harrop. "They have a sustainable initiative here. We want the homes to be greener homes."

Clusters of trees per lot, narrower streets, and an environmentally considered storm water pond, Melcor considered every avenue when it set itself to designing and constructing a new community and a new way of life.

The first few years were filled with long hours and hard, back-breaking work. "There were times when I would sleep at the brewery. I delivered every keg of beer that I had cleaned. I did the sales, the installation of the equipment, and all the invoicing and paperwork." He also had to work with the provincial government and a lawyer to change the rules so he could sell his beer. Now Garrison Brewing Company is thriving with a great waterfront location in downtown Halifax offering 13 different beers and seasonal specialties.

Networking is the key to getting job hunt started

► Reach out to your friends, family and colleagues to find hidden trove of unadvertised job openings

DREW HINSHAW
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

No job hunter should brave the wilderness all alone — that's what friends are for.

The vast online jungle of job boards can fool the unemployed into confusing job seeking for a solitary art, practiced in privacy, while the rest of society mingles over coffee. But if good job seekers know how to mass e-mail resumes from their bedroom window, then great job hunters know how to amplify their job search into a group effort — by roping cousins, colleagues and utter strangers into their quest for that hidden trove of unadvertised openings.

"There's probably eight million jobs out there that nobody knows about," Careerealism.com founder J.T. O'Donnell says.

"That's because businesses are saying 'I'm not going to publish the position, but, boy, if the right person crossed my desk, I would pull the trigger and invest.'"

Crossing that desk at the serendipitous instant requires more than chance — it takes a knack for hassling old pals for new job leads without them even realizing what's happening.

Start by easing in, Connecting With Success author Kathleen Barton recommends.

"Send them a personal message, 'How's your job going,' something to that effect," she suggests. "That gets the conversations started. Then you can share with them an update, that you're in a career transition and looking for something new."

"Don't directly ask somebody for a job," concurs Generation-Y careers blogger Lindsay Pollack. "You want to meet up with people for advice, you want to chat and discuss current events in your industry, but you do not want to show up, shove a resume in someone's face and say, 'I need a job.'"

Mostly, she says, because that smacks of desperation — and while you're looking for a job, becoming ever more pen-iless, frustrated, and despondent, businesses are looking for can-do spunk.

India hosts university presidents

MISSION The largest delegation of Canadian university presidents ever to travel abroad will begin a seven-day mission to India starting today.

The mission is organized by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada and includes 15 university presidents from across the country. Over the course of a week, the presidents will participate in a series of targeted meetings with Indian educators, government officials, and business leaders. During the mission, the university presidents will foster the development of innovative research and co-operation agreements with Indian institutions, raise the profile of Canada's PSE "brand" in India, better understand the implications of India's new Foreign Education Providers Bill, and attract more Indian students to Canada. ● METRO

Oilers beat the champs

► Pair of late goals lifts Edmonton over defending Cup winners Chicago
► Khabibulin makes 26 saves for Oilers, who improve to 2-2-2 on road

► Taylor Hall falls to the ice as he shoots after beating Chicago defenceman Brent Seabrook, right.

Kurtis Foster and Sam Gagner scored 14 seconds apart in the third period, and the Edmonton Oilers rallied to beat the Chicago Blackhawks 2-1 last night.

Nikolai Khabibulin made 26 saves for Edmonton, which improved to 2-2-2 on the road this season and 4-23-3 in its last 30 games away from home dating to December 2009.

Both of the Oilers' road wins this season have been in Chicago against the defending Stanley Cup champions, who dropped to 4-6-0 at home. Edmonton defeated the Blackhawks 7-4 at the United Center on Oct. 29.

OILERS	HAWKS

Ex-Oiler Fernando Pisani scored for Chicago, which got 24 saves from backup Corey Crawford in his fourth start and fifth game of the season.

Blackhawks star forward

Marian Hossa returned after missing five games with a shoulder injury.

Pisani, signed as a free agent by Chicago from Edmonton in the off-season, scored the only goal of the first period at 10:23. He skated in from the right circle and fired a shot under Khabibulin's glove on the short side.

Crawford wasn't heavily tested, but did make a couple of tough stops in the scoreless second period. His best was a quick right pad save on Andrew Cogliano 7:40 into the period.

Crawford made another point-blank pad save on Cogliano in the first minute of the third following a turnover by Chicago's Duncan Keith. Seconds later, Edmonton's Taylor Hall fired the rebound off the right post.

Foster ended Crawford's shutout bid at 7:13 of the third with a power-play goal from a sharp angle. Following a faceoff in the Chicago zone, Foster's screened shot from the right circle slid underneath Crawford's pads.

Gagner put Edmonton ahead 2-1 just 14 seconds later when he slipped through the crease alone and knocked in Dustin Penner's pass while falling to the ice. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vick leads Eagles over Colts

Michael Vick threw for 218 yards and one touchdown, ran for 74 yards and a score, and the Eagles beat Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts 26-24 yesterday.

The Eagles (5-3) are 12-0 after a bye since Andy Reid became coach in 1999. They hadn't beaten Manning in three previous tries.

The Colts (5-3) had to make a quick turnaround after beating Houston Monday night. It certainly seemed the Eagles were the fresher team, especially early.

The Colts lost wide receiver Austin Collie after a hard — illegal — hit by Kurt Coleman forced him to leave on a stretcher in the second quarter.

Browns 34, Patriots 14

Rookie quarterback Colt McCoy scrambled for a touchdown, Peyton Hillis hammered for a career-high 184 yards and two scores and the Cleveland Browns pounded the New England Patriots 34-14.

Well rested after their bye week, the Browns ended New England's five-game winning streak and did it decisively, outplaying one of the NFL's top teams for 60 minutes.

Vikings 27, Cards 24 (OT)

Brett Favre rallied the Vikings from 14 points down to tie it with 27 seconds to play in regulation time, then drove them into position for Ryan Longwell's 35-yard game-winning field goal for a 27-24 overtime victory over the Arizona Cardinals. Favre threw for a career-high 446 yards with two touchdowns and two interceptions for the Vikings.

Jets 23, Lions 20 (OT)

Mark Sanchez threw a 52-yard pass to Santonio Holmes to set up Nick Folk's 30-yard field goal, lifting the New York Jets to a 23-20 overtime win over the Detroit Lions.

Sanchez scored on a quarterback sneak with 2:46 left in regulation and led a nine-play drive that set up Folk's 36-yard kick to send the game into OT. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 Put yourself in a loved one's hands and let them decide how you are going to spend the day. What you do is of less importance than the fact that you are doing it together.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 With Venus, your ruler, moving back into the work and wellbeing sector of your chart today you'll have a lot on your mind. Don't burden yourself with more than you can carry.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 A loved one won't be quite so distant emotionally today, which is good news if there have been barriers between you in recent weeks. If they open up to you then you must open up to them as well.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 What is right for you may not be right for someone else, and it is of the utmost importance that you remember that today. Make the effort to find out how and why people see things differently.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23 You have never been someone who is afraid to rock the boat a little, but now is not a good time to be confrontational, either in your personal affairs or at work.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22 If you carry on pushing yourself too hard you will regret it later in the week. There is no doubt you are heading in the right direction and there is no doubt you will reach your destination, but you must give it time.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 There is something you left unfinished a short while ago. Give some thought as to what it might be, then make a serious effort to complete it. Everything else can wait.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 You seem to be of the opinion that you have failed in some way, that you have fallen short of the high standards you set yourself. Even if you have it's no big deal.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Go out of your way to be friendly with people you work and socialize with. You don't have to do outrageous favours for them but you do have to recognize that they have dreams just like you.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Employers and other authority figures will go out of their way to help you today, but a part of you doesn't quite believe they are being honest about their intentions.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Do what feels good to you and, if others don't like it, do it some more! You have never been afraid to take a few risks and today you will test the boundaries. As far as you're concerned there are no boundaries.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 You may be tempted to bury your feelings where no one can find them. That would be a mistake. You can't keep your desires secret indefinitely.
